教學心得與獲獎感言：

I am grateful to receive this honor from Ming Chuan. Thank you for the wonderful recognition of my work. Teaching has always been my passion and I continue to have this passion as years go by. I think it is one of the most important elements in being a mentor, professor, and inspiration to students. In addition, I constantly look back at the ways I teach and how students respond to my methods of teaching to reflect on any changes that need to be made. I always try my best to make sure that students are learning from various ways as it is difficult nowadays for students to be active learners. Furthermore, in my courses, I have been trying to incorporate sustainable concepts into my teaching. I was inspired by a quote by Nelson Mandela: "Education is the most powerful weapon which you can use to change the world." I believe in order to achieve sustainable development goals, we as educators have the ability and responsibility to provide our knowledge and inspire students to have sustainability concepts as a fundamental knowledge in their career paths or further learning paths. Thus, incorporating sustainable materials and concepts into my courses has become one of the main goals these few years. Feedbacks from students or reflections have been effective yet there is still room for improvement as I view students' career path or further education choices. It is a constant learning process for me as an educator to adjust my teaching methods or course materials for even better outcomes. Once you adopt the attitude that the measure of teaching effectiveness is student learning, a lot of my teaching's most difficult conundrums become solvable. Over the past few years, I have also learned that great teaching is a selfless act. Student learning comes before your own ego and convenience. I am certainly fortunate to have been selected for this honor from among many deserving teachers. I believe that this award emphasizes the primacy of student learning and that great teaching matters. Finally, it encourages me to continue to have this passion for teaching and to learn along the way with all my students.
